Sp. File - Secicear Orga Public Affaire

Former Agent's Book at Stake

P-Porter, D.C. Areth

CIA's Secrecy Oath Sparks Suit Over Prior Censorship

terday claiming the agency's secrecy oath amounts to prior censorship and agency since it will attempt to assess violates the constitutional rights of withe CIA's failure to understand" freedom of speech and press:

Ralph W McGehee, a CIA emthe U.S. District Court suit, that the CTA secrecy oath prevents him from writing about unclassified, information he gathering while an agent

The suit said McGehee is nearing completion of a book on Asian communism, but is afraid of submitting it for publication because of possible legal action by the govern-

The CIA contends that under the contract signed by its agents at the time of employment any writings by former agents must be reviewed by the agency if they contain information obtained while working for the McGehee said the book is based on print a summary of the book; and Dunclassified material gathered dur. Gareth Porter, a journalist and Asian ing his years as an agent and from scholar, who claims he is being research since leaving the agency in denied a right to read McGehee's February 1977.

No other details of the book were A former CIA agent filed suit yes- given, but the suit indicates some terday claiming the agency's secrecy portions of it may be critical of the Asian communist movements.

The case is to be heard before U.S. District Judge June L. Green.

Earlier this year, a federal court in Alexandria, Va., found that another former CIA agent, Frank W., Snepp III, had violated the CIA secrecy code. Snepp was ordered to forfeit all profits from his book, "Decent Interval" and clear all future material with the CIA in advance of publication. 🚈 🕹

Snepp's conviction has been appealed. His book deals with the CIA's activities during the final days before the American evacuation of Vietnam. Joining McGehee in his suit are Public Affairs Press Inc., which wants to publish the book; Michael Kinsley managing editor of The New Republic magazine, which wants to